Washington, DC - The Inter-American Dialogue's Venezuela Working Group (VWG) met on February 14-15 in Bogotá, Colombia to analyze the urgent democratic and humanitarian crisis in Venezuela. In the course of its deliberations, the VWG met with civil society organizations and experts and with leading representatives of the Venezuelan National Assembly, the Government of Colombia, and the United Nations. The group approved the following statement:

The Venezuela Working Group is deeply troubled by the critical humanitarian crisis affecting millions of Venezuelans. The crisis is the most visible manifestation of the institutional breakdown in the country. We commend those within Venezuela and in the international community who are mobilizing humanitarian assistance and distributing food, medicine, and medical supplies in Venezuela under extremely challenging circumstances. It is critical that Venezuelans, including those involved in the mobilization of aid, not be prevented from participating in the distribution of such assistance or subjected to additional violence.

There can be no equivocation regarding the gravity of the humanitarian emergency in Venezuela or the need for a commensurate response. We echo the recent call of 135 Venezuelan civil society organizations for all relevant national and multilateral authorities to explicitly recognize the full scale of the humanitarian crisis in the country. We further call on civilian and military authorities in Venezuela to refrain from any actions that obstruct the entry or delivery of humanitarian assistance to the Venezuelan people. All actors should refrain from further politicizing the distribution of food and medicine.

A peaceful, democratic transition followed by the reconstruction of Venezuela's governing institutions represents the only viable and sustainable solution to the visible suffering of millions of Venezuelans. Overcoming the humanitarian crisis is possible only with political change, including a democratic, transitional government and the celebration of free elections allowing for necessary measures to be adopted with the support of the international community. We call for respect for the free will of the Venezuelan people.
